CASE STUDY

Client

Our client for this project was a well-known London fireplace shop which had sold an Element 4 Modore room-sealed gas fire unit to a private buyer who was refurbishing a beautiful North London property and needed our services to design a suitable fireplace enclosure and surround.

Brief

We were to deliver and install the gas fire unit and carry out the enclosure build around it once it had been fitted. The enclosure design had to meet all of the latest requirements and specifications of Gas Safe, Approved Document J of the Building Regulations and the fire unit manufacturer.

Design

Our design engineer attended the site to liaise with the client and to carry out a full on-site survey. The design was then developed back at our Hampshire office and drawings produced outlining the internal framework structure, the wiring and control requirements, air vents, access panels and gas feed. The external cladding materials were chosen and drawings were sent to the architect for pre-start approval.

On-site Construction

All materials were delivered to site from our depot and our construction team, consisting of a qualified welder fabricator, electrician and gas engineer, set about building the enclosure to the dimensions set out in our approved drawings over a period of a few days.

Once the internal framework and cementitious fireboard were fixed in position, the external fireboard cladding and TV recess were added.

All of the wiring and gas work was completed, tested and certified by our qualified engineers before the final marble finish was applied and the TV installed.
